Who is a Jew?

Powerful exhibit marks Holocaust Remembrance Day

By Joshua Axelrod
Pittsburgh Post-Gazette

For David Rosenberg, a major element of Holocaust remembrance is seeing the 6 million Jews who died as individuals, not statistics.

The longtime University of Pittsburgh librarian and archivist is the curator of "Who is a Jew? Amiens, France 1940-1945," a project that utilizes historical records and images of Jews who lived in the French city of Amiens to humanize their experience and honor those who perished during World War II.

His free exhibit is open to the public through Feb. 4 on the fourth floor of Duquesne University's Gumberg Library as part of the university's commemoration of International Holocaust Remembrance Day, which is observed every year on Jan. 27.

On Wednesday, the university in conjunction with the Holocaust Center of Pittsburgh held a free virtual presentation featuring Rosenberg, Holocaust Center of Pittsburgh executive director Lauren Apter Bairnsfather, Tree of Life Rabbi Hazzan Jeffrey Myers, Duquesne chaplain Rev. Bill Christy and a representative from the Duquesne Hillel Jewish Organization.

Rosenberg, 78, of Mt. Lebanon, spent 11 years working on this project, which can be seen online at www.jewsofthesomme.com. He retired in 2008 after 19 years at Pitt and, two years later, began spending summers in Amiens. On many previous trips to that part of France, he had begun exploring the history of its Jewish population. He eventually came across a large cache of records, many with photos, that revealed Jews who were forced to register with Nazi-controlled authorities in that area.

Soon, he had acquired enough material for an exhibition that has now been displayed worldwide, including six locations across France and four throughout Pittsburgh. Rosenberg hopes Duquesne students take the time to study the exhibit and the people it honors.

"I just want them to see Jews as people," he said. "This exhibit provides us with an opportunity to remember these people. It's an obligation to remember."

"Who is a Jew?" has become an even more relevant monument to victims of antisemitic violence in the wake of the 2018 mass shooting at the Tree of Life synagogue in Squirrel Hill. Rosenberg and his family were Tree of Life members for 20 years, and he said that synagogue "had a profound influence on my religious development and that of my family."

PSO brings back popular PSO360 concerts

The Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra is bringing back its popular PSO360 format, which seats about 200 listeners on the Heinz Hall stage for chamber music performances.

The organization on Wednesday announced a pair of these more intimate concerts, one on March 12 with guitarist Pablo Sainz-Villegas performing with musicians from the orchestra, and one on May 21 with violinist Alexi Kenney, a regular guest concertmaster with the orchestra. Kenney's program has yet to be announced.

In the past, these concerts sold out rapidly due to the limited number of tickets. Both performances are in Heinz Hall at 8 p.m. on their respective evenings. Tickets are $75 and went on sale Friday at pittsburghsymphony.org or 412-392-4900.

Clifton Collins Jr. shows winning form in 'Jockey'

By Ann Hornaday
The Washington Post

MOVIE REVIEW

'Jockey' ★★★

Starring: Clifton Collins Jr., Molly Parker, Moises Arias.

Rating: R for strong language.

Filmmaker Clint Bentley makes a tender, visually poetic feature directorial debut with "Jockey," a closely observed portrait of a man embarking on the downslope of his career.

Jackson Silva, played with expressive subtlety by Clifton Collins Jr., has horse-racing in his veins: His grandfather was a jockey in Mexico, and his own father rode until he got hurt and "caught the fear."

For years, Jackson has been a dependable rider for Ruth (Molly Parker), a seasoned but sensitive trainer with whom he has an almost telepathic friendship. When Ruth acquires a horse with promise, she and Jackson see a future they had considered all but foreclosed, where big paydays may not be guaranteed but are not entirely out of the picture.

As "Jockey" opens, Jackson is showing signs of wear. In a scene with his wiry, battle-scarred colleagues, they compare injuries — broken arms, smashed noses, dislocated this, fractured that. Jackson has broken his back at least three times, and he's been experiencing numbness and tremor on his right side. No sooner is he facing the facts about his diminishing physical capacities than a young rider named Gabriel (Moises Arias) shows up to challenge his elder, professionally and personally.

Bentley, who co-wrote "Jockey" with Greg Kwedar, drew inspiration to make the film from his own father. The film possesses a low-key, lived-in quality that can't be faked. Admirers of Chloé Zhao's films — especially "The Rider" and "Nomadland" — will sense a similar gift for lyrical naturalism in "Jockey." Bentley favors the golden hour, filming his human and equine characters in silhouette, haloed by burnished, amber light.

Like Zhao, who often works with non-actors, Bentley casts real-life jockeys in supporting roles, grounding "Jockey" in the mud of the track and the muck of the stalls; he also eschews some of the hoariest clichés of horse-race movies. He enlisted brothers Aaron and Bryce Dessner, of the band The National, to compose a delicate musical score blessedly devoid of the pulse-pounding taiko-drum theatrics that dominate the genre. Race scenes are filmed in counterintuitive close-ups that convey the toughness and punishing physical fortitude it takes to guide a 2,000-pound, four-legged athlete to victory (or not, to which the mud splatters on a character's face discreetly at test).

As the plot takes shape in "Jockey," it assumes familiar contours. This is one of many "one last gig" dramas that cannily raises the emotional stakes as the final showdown draws

Horse who starred in film as 'Seabiscuit' dead at 24

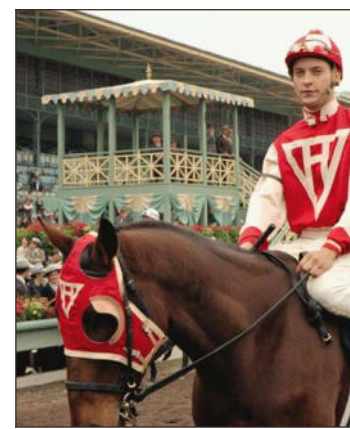

By Peter Sblendorio
New York Daily News

A beloved horse that appeared in the Oscar-nominated film "Seabiscuit" died last week, according to an announcement by the Kentucky farm where the animal actor lived. Popcorn Deelites was 24.

"A 17-year OF resident, his paddock-mate for all of those years, Special Ring, is devastated, as are we. Pops will always be a shining star in our hearts," tweeted the Old Friends farm, which is in Georgetown, Ky.

Popcorn Deelites was one of eight horses that played Seabiscuit in the 2003 movie and also won 11 events during his own racing career, Old Friends says on its website. He died Jan. 20 of complications from colic, an ailment that causes abdominal pain in horses.

The "Seabiscuit" film was inspired by the real-life horse that dominated the racing circuit in the 1930s. The sports drama — which stars Tobey Maguire, Jeff Bridges and Elizabeth Banks — was nominated for seven Oscars in 2004 but did not win. Best Picture and Best Adapted Screenplay were among the categories that the film earned nominations for.

"He was my go-to guy in all the big scenes," jockey Gary Stevens, who played jockey George Woolf in the movie, said in a statement.

"He not only won real races multiple times, but he won the famous match race playing Seabiscuit. He was kind, fast and a great friend."

Popcorn Deelites earned $56,880 in winnings during his racing career, which spanned six years and saw him compete in 58 events, Old Friends says.

near. The machinery is obvious, and predictable, but Bentley never overplays his hand, and his cast keeps the emotions at a simmer that never gives way to a histrionic boil. Both Parker and Arias deliver quietly impressive turns as people orbiting Jackson as he copes with his aging body and reflexes. For Collins, who has been a reliable character actor for years — he played murderer Perry Smith in 2005's "Capote" — "Jockey" is a nothing less than a career breakout.

With his melancholy, careworn face and battered physicality, Collins lends Jackson a guarded soulfulness that makes his character simultaneously inscrutable and transparent. "Jockey" gives him just the canvas he has long deserved to prove the kind of mutable, restrained performance of which he's capable. Audiences may not be entirely shocked by Jackson's choices as "Jockey" makes its way to the home stretch, but they'll nonetheless be surprised with how Collins makes them manifest. Like the horses Jackson has long dreamed of riding, "Jockey" begins by exuding modest promise, and winds up being a thoroughbred.

of similar to my reactions in the wake of the Tree of Life massacre," he said. "How do we rescue the goodness of it from the terrible finale of those lives? ... A murderer can come in and unjustly terminate people's lives, but you can't undo all the goodness that was there."

In Israel, Holocaust education starts early and International Holocaust Remembrance Day is a huge deal every year, according to Shai Maaravi, a 25-year-old Duquesne senior and president of the university's Hillel Jewish Students Organization. Maaravi hails from the Golan Heights region of Israel and is triple-majoring in accounting, finance and information systems technology.

As a teenager, Maaravi visited Pittsburgh for hockey tournaments and enjoyed his time here so much that, after completing his required military service in Israel, he chose to return here for his university studies. He currently lives with a Jewish family in Squirrel Hill and said he appreciates how Pittsburgh's Jewish community is a well-mixed melting pot of Reform, Conservative and Orthodox Jews.

To Maaravi, exhibits like "Who is a Jew?" are a great resource for Americans who aren't required to learn in school about the atrocities committed during the Holocaust. He mentioned an Israeli song about how every person has a name that also speaks to the importance of individualizing Holocaust victims.

David Rosenberg at a 2018 exhibition about French Holocaust victims and survivors at Temple Emanuel in Mt. Lebanon.

"This exhibit shows that those were the people there," Maaravi said. "You can see their faces and the certificates issued to them and their properties that were taken away. It humanizes them and gives more of a personal perspective that people can feel closer to, as opposed to just a number."

Rosenberg says his exhibit can be meaningful for Jews and non-Jews alike. He believes that you "have to become aware of things that are buried in order to be free of the constraints they impose on you," and that his exhibit can be part of the healing process that tragedies like the Holocaust and the Tree of Life shooting inflicted on Jews of all generations.

In Maaravi's mind, there's a correlation between ignorance of the Jewish experience and the rise of domestic antisemitism. He'd like the "Who is a Jew?" exhibit to inspire viewers to do their own research about the Holocaust and Judaism in general.

"Embrace differences among people," he said. "Don't let differences divide. Try to learn more about your classmates and friends. Ask questions. Don't be shy about learning about other people's culture and history. That's the only way you'll really get to know them."
